Girl's Name	Sister's Name	Type of Nut Added	Day of the Week

Five girls made fudge after school this week. Each girl made fudge on a different day and each had a little sister who insisted that she must help. Although each girl made a basic chocolate fudge, they all decided that plain fudge was boring. So, each decided to add a different nut to their fudge, to make it more interesting. Determine the names of each girl and little sister, the type of nut each added to the fudge, and what day each girl made her fudge (each was made on a different day of the week).

1. Monica’s sister made fudge two days after Alice but the day before the girl who added pecans. Julia was Rhoda’s little sister.
2. Margie didn’t make her fudge on Thursday but she did make it before the girl who added macadamia nuts.

3. Denise wasn’t Heidi’s little sister. The girl who added pecans didn’t make her fudge on Tuesday.
4. The first and last girls to make fudge were the girl who added walnuts and the girl whose little sister was named Brenda, respectively.
5. Janice made fudge two days before the girl who added almonds. Susan’s sister added peanuts to her fudge.
6. Heidi didn’t make her fudge on Wednesday but she did add almonds to it. Rhoda didn’t make her fudge on Friday.

South opened one no trump rather than one heart simply because it gave the best description of his hand; the point count is right and he felt the hearts too threadbare to warrant an opening bid of one heart.

West led the jack of spades and declarer could count eleven tricks; three spades, one heart, four diamonds and three clubs. Some would attack this hand too quickly, playing top clubs at tricks two, three and four; then complaining, "How could I tell that clubs were four-two?"

The more astute declarers delay playing clubs until they have more information about how the suit might lie. After winning the king of spades, a low heart should be played from dummy. East wins the queen of hearts and returns a spade. On this layout when declarer takes the king and queen of spades he discovers that West began with a five-card suit there. Next, the ace of hearts exposes West's singleton heart. The penultimate step is to cash four rounds of diamonds, discarding hearts from hand. When West discards a spade on the fourth diamond his original distribution, 5=1=3=4, becomes public knowledge.

So declarer cashes the ace and queen of clubs and then finesses West's known jack of clubs for his twelfth trick.

Of course, if West had shown up with four diamonds he would have begun with 5=1=4=3 distribution and would arrive at the same result as the original South player.

And finally, if East had shown up with an original distribution of 2=5=2=4, he would have been squeezed on the run of the spades and diamonds.

318. (See top of next column.)

After a simple auction with a long-suit game try of three clubs, asking for help in that suit, West sensibly led a trump in an effort to protect his potential club tricks from being ruffed away.

There were nine top tricks and without a trump lead the play would be straightforward. For example on a heart lead, declarer takes his three red suit winners before playing ace and another club. The defence returns a trump, wins in hand and South plays a third club. No matter what the defence does he ensures his tenth trick by ruffing his last club with dummy's jack of trumps.

The average player might not find a plan to make a tenth trick after a trump lead, but it is simple to do so once you have seen this type of deal before. The important thing for declarer to recognise is that he is unlikely to be able to ruff a club in dummy – the trump lead suggests either a pathological delight in leading trumps or, more probably, some fear that clubs may be ruffed in dummy.

What can be done? Well the idea is to score as many trumps as possible! So, with this in mind, declarer cashes the ace and king of hearts at trick two then plays a diamond to the ace to ruff dummy's remaining heart with the ace. A diamond play follows.

Suppose West wins the second diamond and exits with another trump. South wins with dummy's nine and ruffs a diamond. After a club to the ace and another diamond ruff, declarer has made five trumps in hand, two heart tricks, the minor suit aces and there is still the good jack of trumps in dummy to make his the tenth trick on a dummy reversal.

This is a simple hand with a theme that has been around for years. All it requires is a little care on declarer's part in keeping track of his potential tricks during the play... and acting on the result.

West leads the unbid suit of course, choosing the ten of clubs. After winning the trick with dummy's ace of clubs, declarer calls for dummy's queen of diamonds. East takes this with the king of diamonds and finds the menacing shift of the nine of hearts. South plays the jack of hearts from hand but his luck is out when West covers it with the queen.

After winning the trick with the king of hearts, South will regret playing a second diamond immediately. East will win the trick with the ace and continue the attack on hearts. No matter when declarer takes his ace of hearts, he has only seven tricks before East gains the lead to defeat the contract; the defence takes a spade, two hearts and two diamonds for a one trick set.

If declarer counts his tricks before leading the second diamond, he should be able to avoid this fate. As he has only seven immediate tricks if he plays second diamond, he should realize that he needs two tricks from the black suits before he knocks out the ace of diamonds. As a result, his next move should be to play the queen of spades to the closed hand's king.

It does East no good to play the ace of spades on this trick for then declarer makes four spades, three clubs and two hearts. What happens when the king of spades holds? The answer is that South cashes a top club, discarding a heart from dummy, and only now plays a second diamond. He scores a spade, two clubs, two hearts and four diamonds for nine tricks.

Being a bridge book and magazine collector can sometimes have advantages. For example, recently I came across this deal in a newly-acquired bridge magazine from 1938 published on the US West Coast. It was a double dummy puzzle for readers to solve once West led the king of diamonds.

The solution was held over to the next month and alas I do not have the relevant magazine – well, yet anyway. However, the answer must surely have been to duck the opening lead! When West leads a second diamond declarer can arrange a diamond ruff. On the other hand a trump shift does the defence no good for declarer can win, draw trumps, unblock the ace of hearts and use the ace of diamonds as an entry to the king of hearts, on which declarer's remaining diamond will disappear.

If instead declarer takes the ace of diamonds at trick one the defenders can prevent him ruffing a diamond and from ever seeing dummy again! Consequently, he finishes a trick short of his contract.
